

The Art of Counterfeit Confidence; Getting Paid to Spend

Take it from someone with real experience... spending counterfeit bills can be one of the most nerve racking CRIMES you will ever commit. I have purchased thousands in counterfeit bills from producers, and regardless of the quality, I was always equally nervous. I have also passed thousands of dollars worth of counterfeit bills at local foreign-owned shops, restaurant chains, drug deals, and million dollar fast food businesses. Was each attempt successful? Think again! There are, however, several go-to places, and also off-limits businesses that I have concluded over my many successes and failures. There are tips and tricks for passing even the lowest quality bills without issue. There are certain ways to prevent a potential failure, and even a possible legal charge. There are lies to tell to remove you from the "hot seat" if caught. There are even certain ways to dress to either make a successful trip or relieve suspicion from you. All of these things have risen to me over my time working with fake money... and now I am here to share them with you. Welcome to security, welcome to success, welcome to the most in-depth guide that will give you the clear opportunity to make thousands. This is The Art of Counterfeit Confidence; Getting Paid to Spend.

Passing the Bills

Now that you are educated on the consequences and quality of the bills you should be looking for, it's time to talk about what you bought this guide for.

Before any tips or methods to off-loading are described, there are a few general rules to mention:

1. Never mix counterfeit bills with real bills while making a purchase.
2. NEVER run or drive away if your counterfeit bill is identified.
3. It's a bad idea to attempt to make exact change for your bill. (ex. "Can you break this $100 into five $20s please?")
4. Do not argue/question with someone that won't accept the bill.
5. Follow the 10% rule - Spend 10% of the value of your counterfeit bill. (Ex. Buy an item or items totally $2 if using a $20 counterfeit. Or $10 using a $100 counterfeit.)

When making a purchase with the counterfeit bills, exert confidence and look the cashier in the eye. If there is any reason to suspect the bill, then your body language will throw the entire operation. It is important to remain calm and collect while the cashier is handling the bill. There really is no mind trick or secret to get someone to accept the counterfeit bill. Remember that they are not expecting to receive a fake bill, so just naturally come across as another customer, because you are! If you are spending a $100 bill on a low priced item(s), then be sure to ask if they can make change. (Listen closely to their response, if they hesitate to say yes then odds are they had to ask their manager) If there is any indication of "checking with a manager" or a cashier having to go out of their way to make change, then do not use the bill. It will 99% of the end with a manager explaining that “I can’t accept this bill” or asking “Do you have anything else to pay with?” or flat out saying “This bill isn’t real.” Lower valued notes such as $20s should be a breeze to pass as nobody bothers to check them unless they are just incredibly awful.

Dress to Impress, right? It really depends. Spending higher valued notes automatically associate the customer with some sort of wealth. Let’s be honest... anytime you see a Benjamin ($100 bill) in somebody’s wallet, it makes them look important. If you are going to be spending $100 bills, then try and dress for church. By this I mean no gym shorts or running shoes. I always wore khaki pants/shorts and a collared shirt with Sperry’s when I went to spend the bills, regardless of if I was leaving my car or not. Additionally, if you own a nicer car, use it to your advantage. Anything that will take away suspicion for you to be carrying and spending hundred dollar bills will increase your chances of making a successful transaction. On the other hand, if you have a, no offense, P.O.S. for a car, stay away from drive-thrus! Image can be very important so make the best of it. (Most of this image stuff applies for high value notes, $20s are so common they can be passed in pajamas.)

“The Discriminatory Law of Counterfeits”

This obviously is not a real law, but it is completely true whether it is offensive or not. The advantage to passing the counterfeit bills goes from greatest to least starting at the top:

White Females

White Males

Black Females

Black Males

The “Black” race can be substituted for any other race that may be discriminated against. But as I mentioned, the image you portray can change everything. Do not ask why but all of this is just the psychology and statistics behind consumer spending, regarding passing counterfeits. Ultimately, specific race does not have much of an effect on the chance of passing the bills, but it will have an effect on the outcome of a failed attempt. More clearly, employees/managers are more likely to report a black or hispanic person caught using counterfeit bills rather than a well-dressed white male. Yes, it is racist, but it is the world we live in. Keep it in mind when you spend your counterfeit bills.

In the Event of Failure

In the case that you have presented a faulty bill to a cashier and they or the manager has declined, under no circumstances should you argue the legitimacy of the bill. Your number one priority at this point is to retrieve the bill and leave without any suspicion of your integrity. The best way to successfully remove yourself from the “hot seat” is to immediately direct the blame on another individual or legal entity. The way I always did this, and it ALWAYS worked (I even got the employees/managers laughing at me), is that I gave them a story about how “Are you serious? It’s fake? Wow... I just sold my iPhone

my friend and he gave me this hundred. I can't believe he ripped me. I am going to kill him!" and every time in response they laughed, gave me the bill back, and told me to go get him. I would then apologize sincerely and claim to have had no idea it was fake and drive away. This tactic not only excluded me from any suspicion, but I received the counterfeit back which could never be used against me if they decided to report it. Obviously, making any believable story will work, just make sure the item you "sold" matches the price of the bill you are attempting to pass. Also, as a safety precaution, avoid having more than one counterfeit bill on you or any visible cash in your wallet. If the cashier asks if there is something else to pay with, it would look pretty bad to say "sorry I don't have anything other than that" with a real $20 bill showing.

Play Dumb

In the event that a failure somehow escalates into a legal issue, NEVER ADMIT TO USING COUNTERFEITS. The only way for you to be charged with spending counterfeit money is if they can prove you knowingly did so. This goes back to carrying more than one counterfeit at a time... it is not a good idea for this very reason. All you need to do is apologize and tell them that you found the bill on the ground. Do not tell them a friend gave it to you, do not tell them you got it from the bank or from the store, this will only lead to questioning and you will have to prove what you say. Simply tell them you found it on the ground and they will have nothing to base a charge against you on.

In the Event of a Success

Your reaction during a successful transaction is even more crucial than how you handle a failure. It is important to realize that the counterfeit bill that YOU passed is inside their drawer until the manager does a count-down at the end of the day. If the bill is not spotted during this, then it will be caught at the bank. Always make complete transactions. A complete transaction is from when you make an order until the time you receive the item you purchased. It is never a good idea to leave the store without the item you purchased because you have already been given your change... That is incredibly suspicious and will get you caught in a second. Stay cool, act natural, and don't forget to thank the cashier for "their service."

Places to Spend the Bills

I will go ahead and make a blanket statement saying that counterfeit $20 bills and lower are universal when it comes to passing them. They will be accepted anywhere, as nobody cares to check the validity of a $20 bill. I will, however, warn against specific gas stations. There are a lot of gas stations that have UV testers that will put your counterfeit to shame if they go through. As far as fast food chains go, hit those up as hard as you can. The employees are lazy, and do not care enough to check a $20.

$50 and $100 bills are an entirely different story. Every business requires its employees to check $50s or higher for watermark and pen tests. I had to deal with several managers while running $100s through fast food chains. I did pass them at several places, but keep in mind $100s will always be the hardest bill to pass because they receive an immense amount of scrutiny. It is very important that you follow and even exceed the 10% rule when using counterfeit $100s. Buying something worth $1 with a $100 is absolutely crazy.

Popular Places that Never Rejected My $100 Counterfeit Bill:

Burger King
KFC
Dollar General
Dollar Tree
Drug Deal (See Down the Page)

Popular Places that Always Rejected My $100 Counterfeit Bill:

Taco Bell
McDonald's
Krispy Kreme
Sonic

As mentioned before, these are a list of places that consistently rejected counterfeit $100 bills, but anywhere will 99% of the time accept $20s and lower.

Drug Deals

Using counterfeit bills for drug deals can reap massive reward, so long as you play by the rules:

Make sure the dealer can't contact you
Do not give real information
Do not give him the ability to find you (i.e. mutual friends he can ask)
Do not get caught during the trade, or be careful that if they do you will not be harmed

Utilizing drug dealers for off-loading your counterfeits can be a great because it is not a legal transaction. Unlike a legitimate business, drug dealers have no legal stance to press charges against you for fraudulent behavior. After all, they are drug dealers. The major problem in dealing with drug dealers is that violence is often a first resort for them, so make sure to follow all of the rules!

Localbitcoins.com

Do you have thousands in counterfeit bills that you want to get rid of at once? Localbitcoins.com is the place to go. The site is basically a Craigslist for people wanting to buy and sell bitcoins. You can search sellers/buyers by area, and contact them. The two parties will meet up and make a cash to bitcoin transaction. Obviously, you will be paying in counterfeit bills to the seller. Again, do not give out any personal information because these people will be furious when they find out that they received $10,000 in counterfeit bills. A good way to ensure a smooth transaction is to make a legitimate purchase with a seller for $1,000+ to gain their trust, and see how closely they check the bills they receive. Later on you will contact them and request to purchase all of the bitcoins they have. This time you will bring as much as you have with you in counterfeits, and make the trade. You will hand them the cash, and they will send the bitcoins to whatever address you supply them. Simply walk away and enjoy the hefty amount of BTC received.

Craigslist

This method mainly covers Craigslist, but same applies for drugs if you want to go that route. You can buy weed, coke, meth, or whatever you see most profitable and resell. I'll leave you to your own details for that. Let's get to the Craigslist method everyone is using here. To start off, you will only want to buy/resell easily portable, high profitable items with values of $400 or more. These could be iPhones, iPads, Cameras, Laptops, or other electronics. Always use a city outside of your own! You don't want the chance of someone seeing you more than once and recognizing you, especially if you plan on reselling in your town. You can wear shades, hat, disguise yourself. You can either set up different emails to email different people or go out and buy a prepaid phone WITH REAL CASH ONLY.

You do not want to use your real email or phone number. Never use your real name! Always have a different alias. So you find an item you like, either email them and set up a date/time to meet or call and set it up. Be sure to always use different cities. Try to keep the money in the 100s values ($400, $500, $1000, $2000). Use preferably a parking lot with no cameras. You don't want to be on a camera that can easily identify you. Walmart, Target, or other stores work well in the evening. If you're emailing, ask the person what car, place, and time they'll be there so you can approach them. You do not want the person to see your vehicle/license plate, so park somewhere else where you can walk to them. Same goes for when you call. Remember to use a different name and email each time. So you set up the meet and you're about to walk up to them. They have no intentions of getting scammed with fake money. You're a good person and they're just looking to make a few bucks, so don't sweat it. Act like it's just a regular trade. Walk up to them, shake hands, ask about the product like you're interested in it. Now comes the part where you present the cash. There's a few ways to do this, and you can even improvise. Show up with the money in an envelope, pull it out and slowly count the money like a bank teller would, but keep the money in YOUR HANDS. Make sure they hear and see it. After you're done counting put it back in the envelope and ask about the item again to divert their attention. You know, little social engineering. Afterwards, hand them the envelope, many of the users here have done the same thing except after they're done counting out the money they place a few extra REAL dollars on top ($20 and $5 seem to be the sweet spot) and thank them for their time. Then part ways in the way I stated earlier. Make sure you get away without them seeing where you're going. No, don't run away. Act casual. Now that you've made it back safe, you can sell your item in another city by craigslist. Maybe set up a different eBay. Even sell in on the deep web if you want.
